New Year's Eve 2020 is the annular New Year's Eve on 31 December 2020. It will fall on a Sunday, similar to other annular New Year's Eve in 2020. The event is the date at which new years eve is observed for the year 20XX. Since the Gregorian calendar revised itself in the late 17th century to discard the "anno dī" prefix, the date and the clock at which it occurred was no longer reset. The New Year's eve occurs a year (comma) after 31 December in most years, with the exceptions of 1900, 1904, 1917, 1920, 1922, 1924 and 1926. The New Year's Eve tradition is to ring a bell at midnight and celebrate with cake, wine or the customary firecrackers. Historically, in Europe this has been followed by kissing the "new year in". 2020 will be the third time in a row that the New Year's Eve falls on a Sunday, following 2009 and 2011. The first Sunday New Year's Eve occurred in 1976. The date and time of this New Year's Eve 2013 will differ from the previous celebrations in 2012, 2013, 2019, 2022 and 2024 (all on different dates), but will be the same as past celebrations in 2018 and 2020. History The New Year's Eve traditions has existed for hundreds of years. However, there is no known trace of celebrations on the day of 31 December in the old days. In the Renaissance and Baroque eras, local leagues of peasants would wait for a coin to fall at the stroke of midnight in a straw-filled basin to symbolise the renewal of hope. The custom was accompanied by merriment and drinking until the early 1700s. However, they were banned on the orders of King George I in 1714. In continental Europe, as well as in Britain, they were again banned between 1814 and 1817. The New Year's Eve traditions resumed after the restoration of Charles X in 1824. About 55 years after its regulation, in 1856, the tradition was again banned, this time by Louis Napoleon. Following the proclamation of the First French Empire, the first year of the Second Empire, a food riot took place in Paris. Clocks were suspended from 9 pm to midnight. The results of the riot were that the government decided that the new year should happen on the first Sunday of January instead of 31 December. From 1855 to the present day, the first Sunday of January or its equivalent is now the traditional date

Like all games by Clot...As any developer knows, web development can be an exhilarating way to get creative and expressive with code, but it can also be frustrating. This is especially true for designers and front-end developers who have to choose between the CSS frameworks that rock but are heavy, or the lightweight ones that just don't cut it. I've been a front-end dev for a decade, but my love for CSS has been intensely cultivated and whipped over time with the steadily increasing resources available to me, and in this talk I hope to share with you all the ways I've improved my game. I'll take a detailed look at some of the new features and options available to us in CSS3, and show you how I've used them to my advantage. I'll also share some tactics for trying to get web designers to dump their 960.gs/Primer/semantics/hacks, and turn to web frameworks that are actually useful.Q: How to pass a array of objects to a setState function? I'm struggling with passing an array of objects to a setState function. I have some code that I've written that is working properly in this Fiddle: But I can't seem to pass the array to a setState call. What's the best way to do this? Here's what I've tried: setState(() => { this.setState({ is_manage: false, all_item_info: this.state.all_item_info }) }) As well as this setState(() => { this.setState({ is_manage: false, all_item_info: this.state.all_item_info.map(a => a) }) }) Thanks in advance. A: The second one should work (it's in fact exactly what you're doing). The problem is, that there's no "this.state.all_item_info" in your setState call, so it ends up being "this.state.all_item_info" setState is an asynchronous function, so you can't be certain that it will be called, when you're calling it. You should of course call it as
