Amebae and Apelings Our review on C. reticulata was most informative. I've never seen this species before. You said that E. apelingsii & C. lanceolata also have red dots in their patterns. Could you expand on that a bit? Re: Amebae and Apelings The apelings has the best shape in terms of color but no red dots are there in that species. As for the omebae the pattern is a little different than the others but there are not any red dots. We can not do much regarding the amebae as the one in that page we have for them is the page with the drawings. But we are looking for someone with more information about them. Re: Amebae and Apelings Well, I don't see the red dots in the Apelings either. So, I just looked at the photo, and here are my observations: - The Ameba itself has an ovoid shape (somewhat similar to C. reticulata in that respect), and there is also a rather large rounded ring around the organism. The dot is indeed very inconspicuous. - Now, the Apelings seem to have a smaller dot in the middle, which is barely visible.
