As Gautama Buddha, the founder of Buddhism sat in the meditation tree [Bodhi tree] [Ashoka = a mythological bird] [Gandhara] So the Buddha = a bird who sat on the top of a tree [Bodhi tree] [Ashoka] But the Buddha could not rule society until he accomplished the Four Noble Truths. He could not convert people from the belief system of sickness and death to the belief system of wellness and longevity until he accomplished the Four Noble Truths. He could not help society heal itself until he accomplished the Four Noble Truths. So we are always attracted to Love, Health and Wealth. [Bodhi tree] [Ashoka] [Gandhara]

Conventional pinball games also use a set of “fixed goals” to score game points. In some games, one player's ball is captured and removed from the play field. The player's ball then falls into a scoring column and is accumulated into a score that is visible to the player. In other games, a ball fall into a predetermined number of balls that are kept by the machine and then counted by a processor. Some pinball games provide an option of allowing the player to use a “random play” feature. In “random play,” the player is given a choice of selecting from a set of predetermined play rules for a particular play. The random play selection includes a set of rules for a particular play. For example, the set of rules may include a set of rules for a game of HORSE. In another example, the random play selection may include a set of rules for a poker game. Most conventional pinball games have a single play field on which the player's ball travels from an opening into a play area in which various play elements are located. For example, a pinball game may include a plurality of play elements, such as a plurality of free play elements, playable characters, and tables for collecting or reducing a score. Free play elements typically alter a payable of a game that is used to determine the amount of scoring that occurs when a ball passes through the play field. For example, 595f342e71
