Communication Methods in Populism and Democracy:. Laudan, Paul. (2006)..In large organizations, the failure of a communication system or process may be of considerable or even critical importance. Customer calls, critical email messages, important document modifications, and other events can, and often do, result in irreparable harm if undetected or undiscovered by an appropriate level of management. The traditional systems and processes for communications between people in such organizations have little or no capability to detect and warn of such events, and hence depend on humans detecting and reporting them.
