In the Light of the World and Malibu College Low price £21.99, new discount price £17.99 Normal classes According to a survey by the National Association of Self-Help Groups for the LGBT Community, about one quarter of all inmates in correctional facilities identify as LGBT, compared with less than 6% of the general adult population. Representatives from the office of corrections in New York City have alleged that the percentage of trans inmates in their facility is higher than what the average inmate self-identifies as. Sara Wolf, one of the correctional officers in New York City, said that some of the reasons why transgender people are more likely to end up in prison are that they are more likely to be poor, unemployed, drug users, and unable to cope with problems. "Trans people have fewer supports to help them stay out of the system," Wolf stated. Jeff Jenkins, deputy commissioner of the city's corrections and retention division said: "Trans people, by definition, are not going to be represented in our institutions. The struggle for normality: a guide for (self-)therapy for homosexuality Stanley Cohen, a sociologist at Princeton, said that, "Half a century ago, within the arc of a generation, the American public and the elites that it represents were astonished to witness a rebellion against traditional Christianity. In an article by the Advocate magazine in the early 1980s, Max Silver, a professor of psychology at the University of California at Berkeley, discussed the integration of gay and lesbian people into the American Society. "They (the new members of the sexual minorities) are very angry. . Their anger has nothing to do with the intransigent and authoritarian stereotypes of gay men and lesbians that were considered legitimate in the past," Silver stated. He said that "Conventional people still perceive a clash of cultures in which the gay and lesbian people become a new and (morally) illegitimate minority. This new role as an outsider reinforces a self-defeating identity." He also said that, "Every out-group member has an ambivalent position toward the in-group, which is best understood as a rational response to an instrumental status (quoted from the Advocate,
