December 6, 2013 Real Food for Real Meals I'm in the middle of writing a post about how food technology needs to stay out of my food. That's for another time, and I'll get to that. The real meat of my post is that I've found a recipe I love for my next holiday dinner and I'm going to share it. I'm not the sole chef for my home, but I am part of the kitchen team, so I'm able to share a few recipes for you all. I'm even going to give you a breakdown of ingredients we use over the holidays, because it

Preoperative chemotherapy with cisplatin and paclitaxel in patients with completely resectable or borderline resectable gastric cancer. Neoadjuvant chemotherapy is used to improve the curability of patients with gastric cancer. However, it is unknown whether neoadjuvant chemotherapy that includes the platinum agent cisplatin would lead to better disease-free and overall survival than other chemotherapy regimens. We conducted a multicenter, randomized, open-label study to compare the effects of preoperative chemotherapy on patients with completely resectable or borderline resectable gastric cancer. Patients were randomly assigned to receive two courses of either cisplatin and a taxane (paclitaxel) or of paclitaxel and a fluoropyrimidine (5-fluorouracil, capecitabine, or tegafururacil). The primary end point was pathologic complete response in the resected specimen. More patients receiving paclitaxel had a pathologic complete response in the resected specimen than did those receiving cisplatin and paclitaxel (paclitaxel, 51.7%; cisplatin, paclitaxel, 30%; cisplatin, paclitax
