Q: What's the proper way to add to a ruby array? After all the great answers I found here, I figured out I have a major flaw in my understanding of arrays. I thought I understood that arrays were passed by reference, but this code seems to show otherwise.

irb(main):032:0> array = [] => [] irb(main):033:0> array [3] irb(main):034:0> array => [3] irb(main):035:0> array.length => 1 irb(main):036:0> array [3, 4] irb(main):037:0> array => [3, 4] what I was expecting is that it add 4 to the end of the array, not modify it.

A: I think there is an even simpler explanation for your question than the answer that @JohnHertz has provided. (not that there is anything wrong with the answer)

>>> array = [] >>> array

Evaluation of the feasibility of computerized adaptive testing for the lumbar multifidus and erector spinae muscles in persons with low back pain. The multifidus and erector spinae muscles are pivotal in maintaining low back stability. Individuals with low back pain need to maintain balance between these muscles. The subject for this study was a group of 44 individuals who suffered from nonspecific low back pain (LBP). In this group, 22 scored as having a disability and 22 did not. A specific computerized dynamic postural analyzer program was designed to evaluate static balance of these muscles for people with low back pain. With this program, the subject stands with feet together in a rectangle that dynamically provides visual information on the center of gravity of the upper-body, and permits adaptation of force to the length of movement. The program also allows quantification and representation of the force exerted during contraction of the musculature evaluated. The results obtained in this study indicate that adaptation of testing is effective in obtaining normal contraction of the evaluated musculature in LBP subjects. The validity of the measurement is seen in analyzing the relationship between body mass, age, gender, and the measured force. The variability of force measurement also was reduced with the adaptive

What's new:

: Turbulence is an airplane survival game released January 17th, 2017 on Steam, support for osx and android is being developed. THE game is playable in 3D but uses player defined airmap & ground modules to change the scenery. Airmap is viewable with a mouse over the milage or using the camera (you can see the navmesh, ground and clouds in all 3 directions). Character / Player modeling: smogonnage is the main developer of TURBULENCE. His work includes FSX pre-flight, cabin models, AI, as well as 3D elements such as multiplayer match-ups and arcade-style game modes. The overall size of the airplane character models is 1,200,000 polygons and the collider-mesh is no larger than 150m2. The quality of the free model and avatar content can be measured by the sheer volume of hours put into the character model by smogonnage. A full avatar set can be enjoyed in about 5 minutes and can even be used as a server display. The character is capable of venting smoke, sprays water and fire. TURBULENCE is a revolutionary game that combines first and third person flight view with real-time, multiplayer, and arcade-style game modes. Each player can control their own airplane in both first and third person view. While flying your airplane in 3D you are attacked and can respond in real time, including interacting with other avatars, action buttons, and menus. You cannot just fly around aimlessly, objects are pulled out from their arrays and can be shot, the ground shakes, there is a default machine gun, there is a smoke machine gun, there are wings and bodies, there are missiles, targets, and scenery. All of the game modes (and other details) are a first in the airplane game space. These modes include a hot-drop, capture the tail, increase races, mission piloting, dogfighting, airplane combat, and survival modes. You can be creative (or more likely, destructive), take control of other airplanes, and coordinate with other players. Web site: is a game dev blog, shipyard links, community, and more.
