function space $C^1(\mathbb{R})$ such that this function space is complete I was wondering whether there is any metric on function space $C^1(\mathbb{R})$ which would make this function space (vector space, metric space) to be complete? I already knew that real line is a complete metric space. If this can be done on $C^1(\mathbb{R})$ is it possible? A: If $X$ is a metric space, then its metric completion (with respect to the metric space topology) can be described simply as follows: A subset $C$ of $X$ is a closed subspace iff $C = \mathrm{cl}(C)$; A subset

$C$ of $X$ is a Cauchy subspace iff $C = \mathrm{cl}(\mathrm{cl}(C))$; If $C_1, C_2$ are Cauchy subspaces of $X$, then $C_1 \cup C 2$ is a Cauchy subspace of $X$; Finally, if $C$ is a Cauchy subspace of $X$, then $\mathrm{cl}(C)$ is also a Cauchy subspace of $X$. Any metric space $X$ with its metric completion $\mathrm{cl}(X)$ is called a complete metric space. A metric space $X$ is complete iff it

Skin scars are common, universal, and usually a normal and natural consequence of either the body's response to a wound or injury, or the healing process. Slight, superficial, and non-palpable scars that develop over bony prominences or areas where there is little skin are usually unremarkable and usually have little effect on the person's quality of life. However, many people desire to remove these unnoticeable and insignificant scars, especially women who wish to modify their appearance. Selective laser trabeculoplasty (SLT) is frequently used as an adjunctive nonoperative measure for treating congenital and acquired pupillary sphincter muscle defects (PSDM). This study was performed to determine the efficacy and adverse effects of SLT for the treatment of PSDM. The results indicate that SLT is a safe and effective technique to treat PSDM. This invention relates to a method of making asphalt concrete for paving a road surface, and more particularly to a method of making a water-reducing binder mixture which is applied to a road surface and heated to asphalt concrete having improved self-leveling properties.
