The lipoxxygenase inhibitor nordihydroguaiaretic acid (NDGA) inhibits endothelial proliferation in two distinct ways: (1) by decreasing the production of platelet-activating factor (PAF) and (2) by inhibiting the induction of granulocyte-macrophage colony stimulating factor (GM-CSF) synthesis by endothelial cells. We used various recombinant GM-CSF proteins (rGM-CSFs) including the monomeric forms, monomeric and dimeric forms of rGM-CSF and the dimeric form of rGM-CSF-2, to further elucidate the mechanism of this induction. In the absence of added rGM-CSFs, production of all-trans-retinoic acid (RA) as well as glycolate oxidase (Go) activity increased in cultured human umbilical vein endothelial cells (HUVECs) following treatment with 25-100 microM NDGA. In contrast, 50 microM NDGA suppressed production of all-trans-RA, but did not affect the production of retinoic acid isomer (iso-RA), which is known to inhibit cell growth in cultured endothelial cells. The induction of Go activity by NDGA was inhibited by all-trans-RA at concentrations ranging from 10^{-6} to 10^{-8} M. However, the induction of Go activity by the monomeric form of rGM-CSF, monomeric and dimeric forms of rGM-CSF and the dimeric form of rGM-CSF-2

Transcription of the gene for the C-terminal basic protein HU of the dsDNA-binding protein of the histone like nucleoid structuring protein HU in some archaea is shifted from the leading to the lagging strand of the replication fork. In the model system Sulfolobus solfataricus the recombinase Swi5 is required for the processing of lagging strand replicative helicase DnaB and a mutant defective in its trans-acting activity and hence in the lagging strand synthesis fails to form intact plasmids. Our recombinant HU protein from S. solfataricus (Hup) is an interesting candidate as bona fide "replication machineries", in this context, because it binds tightly to DNA in the absence of HU2-type DNA binding and can function as a homotrimer with an apparent stoichiometry of 3Hup dimers per HU tetramer. We show that the Hup dimers and tetramers are entirely stable and non-covalently linked even at very high protein concentrations. The trimeric Hup and its two position-switched variants were functionally characterized in the context of archaeal DNA packaging. The position switched variants were generated by swapping the originally homodimeric Hup subunits by heterodimers between the variants, including the recombinase Swi5 and its corresponding homodimer, and characterizing the resulting Hups in DNA packaging. We show that (beta)3/beta(2)3-switched variants with a much reduced DNA-binding affinity that are still trimeric in solution, bind to the single-stranded DNA of the ssDNA gap of SSV9, "close" their DNA-binding globes at the "earlier" and
