Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an electrical connector, and more particularly to a board to board connector. 2. Description of the Related Art U.S. Pat. No. 7,135,026 discloses an electrical connector that includes an insulating housing and a contact module mounted on the insulating housing. The contact module includes a plurality of contacts, a housing defining a pair of spaced-apart ends, a first side plate disposed between the pair of ends, a second side plate disposed between the pair of ends and opposite to the first side plate, and a third side plate disposed between the pair of ends and opposite to the first side plate and the second side plate. The contacts are mounted on the first side plate of the housing. The contacts include a printed circuit board, a plurality of contact members formed by stamping and extending from one surface of the printed circuit board and having two main beams upwardly extending from the printed circuit board and a pair of tail portions extending from the printed circuit board downwardly and rearwardly and opposite to the contact members, and a plurality of actuators formed by stamping and extending from the other surface of the printed circuit board and having a pair of moving portions opposite to each other and to the tail portions. The actuators are insert molded in the housing, and movably receive the tail portions of the contact members. The connectors disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 7,135,026 are beneficial for the contact members can be movably received in the actuators to provide stable engagement between the contact members and the actuators. As the contact members are attached to the printed circuit board from an upper surface of the printed circuit board, a portion of the printed circuit board is unsupported. Accordingly, the portion of the printed circuit board may be damaged. Thus, a board to board connector with a locking mechanism is desired.Q: Let $\mathcal{T}$ be a topology on $S$.
